Rural Youth Clubs Organised Around Extension Training Institutions in India

ED431

The strength of a nation is known by the potentiality of its youth. As the future citizens, youth are charged with the responsibility of making improvement in every walk of life with which they are associated, and for this they have to be prepared physically, emotionally and mentally through scientific training in the professions they wish to undertake as adults. In the Community Development Programme which aims at the overall improvement of the rural community, youth have to play a dominant role in stimulating the socio-economic activities in rural areas.

Many official and non-official agencies are making efforts to organise rural youth programmes, keeping the needs of the rural society in view. As a result, such programmes are developed in isolated areas on a limited scale, but so far a uniform pattern of youth activity all over the country is lacking.

The Directorate of Extension which is responsible for the training of Gram Sevaks and Gram Sevikas, the front line workers in the Community Development Programme, has taken some concrete steps in this direction to acquaint the Gram Sevak and Gram Sevika trainees with this endeavour.

If tackled properly, new ideas are more easily accepted and adopted by the youth than the adults. Rural young men and women if organised into disciplined groups and provided with adequate professional knowledge are likely to take up improved practices on their farms and in their homes more quickly. Youth also exercise a considerable influence on parents, and if the rural young men and women are involved into productive programmes, a better participation of their parents in agricultural extension and community development programmes is secured.

Keeping this in view, it was realised that the Gram Sevaks and Gram Sevikas must be acquainted with the organisation of youth activity through pilot youth clubs started around the Extension Training Centres and Home Science Wings. These pilot clubs provide them an opportunity to acquire sufficient knowledge and skill in promoting such a programme in the areas where they are posted after their training. As the Training Centres and Home Science Wings are staffed with subject-matter specialists in various fields, and have other necessary equipment, it is easier for them to set up model youth organisations on a systematic basis. A suitable syllabus about rural youth activity has been drawn up for the two years' training programme of Gram Sevaks. It is given at Appendix I.

A scheme of organising ten pilot rural youth clubs around each Extension Training Centre, has also been introduced. Wherever a Home Science Wing is located in the campus of an Extension Training Centre, one or two Mahila Mandals are to be organised by them. A target of 1,000 youth clubs around the training institutions has accordingly been fixed to be reached by 1962-63.

In order to attain this goal, Instructors in Social Education at these training institutions, Social Education Organisers of the Development Blocks attached to these institutions and voluntary leaders interested in the programme of youth activity are being given orientation training in rural youth activity. So far, 407 person s have undergone this training. Such training would also continue to be organised at intervals in future. So far, 701 youth clubs including 31 Mahila Mandals have been organised in the Development Blocks located around the training institutions.

Here, in this Directory, an attempt has been made to give a brief account of the progress made so far in this activity.
